Re: Flow Calc 2009 Testimonial
Hamilton Civil Software

It is refreshing to find an alternative to the existing hydraulic calculation software on the market that seems to be reasonably priced and offers the necessary support without a long term and expensive commitment.

I have been using the software for an extended period and have not experienced any problems with its use. During this initial period of use I have compared the results obtained from Flow Calc against other products and methods I have used and could find no discrepancies with the results.

I think this program represents the best choice for open channel calculations currently available.
